

A PRIVATE FAMILY PLACE

Same Sky

Different places. Same sky.

A beautiful illustrated house where a parent and child can keep finding one another between visits.

SAMESKY.FAMILY

THE QUESTIONS UNDERNEATH THE DISTANCE

A place for what distance leaves out

Calls matter, but schedules slip. Text threads bury the important things. A child should not have to perform closeness on demand, and a parent should not have to choose between disappearing and overwhelming them. Same Sky gives the relationship a quiet place to keep living between visits.

QUESTION

What is Same Sky, exactly?

Same Sky is a private illustrated world for a parent living apart and their children, with an optional second-parent relationship. Every parent and child share their own house together. Its rooms give real family acts a place to land: letters in the Writing Room, voices in the Broadcast Attic, ordinary photographs on the Refrigerator, memories in the Library, plans on the Map, and a room that belongs to just those two people. Your family supplies the words, voices, and moments. Same Sky gives them a world that can hold them.

QUESTION

Why not just text, call, or use a family group chat?

Keep using them. Same Sky is for what they miss: timing, context, permanence, and discovery. A child can open a letter on the day it becomes true, hear your voice when they are ready, find a wordless hug without pressure to answer, and return to a memory long after it would have vanished up a message thread.

QUESTION

What need does it fill for a parent living apart?

Distance creates long, quiet spaces between conversations. You may worry about intruding. Your child may not want another scheduled talk. Same Sky creates gentle ways to say, "I know you. I remember. I am still here." It does not pretend the miles are gone. It keeps your care visible while they are real.

THE QUESTIONS UNDERNEATH THE DISTANCE

Every relationship deserves its own shape

QUESTION

What if both parents live in different places?

A child should never have to flatten two important relationships into one group thread. Same Sky can give each parent and child their own private illustrated house together. The child may visit one parent's house, then the other's, while each relationship keeps its own letters, voices, rooms, rituals, and memories. The parents can be coming from two different places without either bond becoming secondary, blurred, or performed for an audience.

QUESTION

What does my child actually do there?

They explore glowing rooms, touch living objects, listen, write, draw, record, send small signals, save moments, and help shape a private family world. They are not an audience for a parent's messages. They are a participant with their own voice, their own Pocket Guide, and age-appropriate paths through the house.

QUESTION

Will it feel like homework or social media?

No. There are no streaks, scores, public profiles, advertisements, popularity counters, or infinite feeds. Nothing punishes a family for needing quiet. A message may show that it was delivered, seen, heard, or opened, but Same Sky never turns affection into a performance review.

THE QUESTIONS UNDERNEATH THE DISTANCE

Private by design, simple to understand

QUESTION

Is our family content private?

Same Sky is built as a private family world, not a public platform. Pair rooms keep their intended boundaries, protected media is not exposed as public scenery, and the app does not passively track a child's exact location. It also does not use AI to imitate a parent or child, or to manufacture emotional messages in their voice.

QUESTION

What does it cost, and am I locked in?

Same Sky is $19.50 USD per month for one parent and up to six children, plus any applicable tax. A second parent, with a separate relationship house for every child, is $9.75 per month. Completed generated Storybooks are optional at $4.50 each and are the one keepsake a parent may send to all their children. There is no setup fee, long-term commitment, or cancellation penalty. The point is not to sell more screen time. It is to give the screen time families already have a place with memory, meaning, and a reason to return.

The miles are real. So is the love.

Explore the house and learn more at samesky.family